Are we in a period B? Has the government said actually, yes, more times than period b has ended

Can only table a motion to not ratify in a period A if such a motion has not been approved in the same period

If the number of times the commons have resolved against PLUS the number of times the lords have resolved against EQUALS the number of times the government have said actually yes, then the government has an opportunity to table a new motion

Doesn't work because both Houses might resolve against in period A, meaning the PLUS over to B and, once in government say actually yes, that is 1 and not equal

New period starts on the day/sitting day after the one on which a motion mentioned in the statement

21 joint sitting days elapse since the day after laid before Parliament

21 House of Commons sitting days elapse since the day after ministerial statement
